

All these thoughts rocketed through my mind...”¹

After receiving treatment for her arm at another clinic, Emmebeth returned home a changed woman. She writes, “I have realized through these current experiences in my life that I have a larger responsibility on my shoulders. I am now determined to go above and beyond to help the children of Hammer and Abune Andreas orphanage. This is my mission and I know that through hard work, dedication and charity, it will and can make a difference in the lives of these children.”

“I was beside myself. I was heartbroken. I was very emotional to the point where I didn’t care for myself any more if even I had to lose my arm. These kids do not deserve this. They didn’t make a choice to come to this world...”

Her mission is, “...Through hard work dedication and charity it will and can make a difference in the lives of these children”. Please join me in my project to support these children, whether it is through finding ways to spread the word of all the great things that are happening for Orphans in Ethiopia, through sponsorship, by providing an education and school uniforms for a child, fundraising that would allow the children to go beyond the 12 years of a public education and venture into a career path that can ultimately change the cycle of poverty, donating the fundamental items that are needed for everyday living (blankets, first aid supplies, medications, shoes, clothes, and food). However my story touches you, however big or small GOD touches your heart in the pursuit of helping the children of Ethiopia, I thank you in advance and the children of Ethiopia also thank you for your generosity.”

Emmebeth in a classroom with students

Wow! What an inspirational story! I feel so honored that Emmebeth would invite me to use my talent to teach the children at the orphanage, and I plan to do just that. But, beyond that, in today’s climate where politics is such a dirty business and racism is so alive and well and truth is open to interpretation...when people throw their hands up and exclaim, in exasperation, “Well, what can I do?” Here is a real-life story of a woman who took charge and is doing something to help her fellow man. In doing so, she helps the world – she shapes the future – our future.

But, beyond that, in today’s climate where politics is such a dirty business and racism is so alive and well and truth is open to interpretation...when people throw their hands up and exclaim, in exasperation, “Well, what can I do?” Here is a real-life story of a woman who took charge and is doing something to help her fellow man.

In case you are interested in shaping the future too, here is how to contact Emmebeth Mischel at Ethiopia’s Tomorrow: Ethiopia’s Tomorrow: 28 Hoffman Street Maplewood, NJ 07040 USA. 973-951-8035 Source: <http://ethiopiatomorrow.org/about/emmes-story/>

Emmebeth and orphans

Ethiopia’s future leaders

Orphans